November 1, 1979. Robert B. Wiygul of Abrams, Anton, Robbins, Resnick, Schneider & Mager, P.A., Hollywood, for petitioner. No appearance for the State of Florida. HERSEY, Judge. Respondent, who is presently under the jurisdiction of the Florida Youth Services Center, petitions this court for a writ of certiorari to review a temporary injunction in an adoption proceeding. The subject matter of the litigation, a 15-year-old runaway from Louisiana, became the focus of attention in the local press. She is now enjoined from discussing the case with anyone who may seek her out and from interfering with the judicial proceedings currently pending. While certain questions have been addressed on the merits, our analysis has focused on the breadth of the order entered. The order, consisting of eight separate paragraphs, imposes a variety of restraints on the very life of the subject, all of which are conditioned upon service of process within the state. The order recites that petitioner was granted custody of the child. Insofar as now appears, the propriety of this ruling is not in issue. The paragraph providing for service of process does so conditionally, beginning with the declaration that the state has engaged in "judicial inefficiency." The order also recites that the court has considered the welfare of the child and the rights of the parties and thereafter imposes reasonable and necessary requirements to protect the child from unnecessary and inappropriate contact with the public in order to preserve the court's jurisdiction over the child. The order then provides, inter alia, that: "[T]he subject minor child not be allowed to... participate in any publicity promoting the case, including but not limited to making statements about the case, or to appear before the media or to participate in media interviews or appearances about the case until the time of final hearing, excepting for interviews with the media regarding the inescapable need for the Court to retain custody
