A transport vehicle of the above mentioned type is known from WO 97/23245 A1, in which the drive steps are arranged next to one another and engage around the pivoting countershafts, both horizontally and vertically. A disadvantage here is that large-area drive steps are provided for in that case, whereby the entire length of the vehicle is increased due to the drive steps and the associated pivoting countershafts. It is an object of the invention to configure the transport vehicle of the above-mentioned type such that it can be operated in a more economical manner and can be maintained at a lower level of complication. According to the invention, this object is accomplished by the fact that the pivoting countershafts are mounted on the floor space in such a way that the pivot axis extends parallel to the direction of travel, and a drive shaft which can be turned in the direction of travel by means

It’s a neat satire, but I don’t think it’s a fair portrayal of what is really happening. This is just an inaccurate portrayal of the reality of the election process, both for the merchant AND the candidate. If you have ever seen an election in person, you will know that it takes a serious (and usually well-heeled) force to win. You have to spend thousands of dollars (and I mean thousands, not hundreds) to make sure you get your ‘credits’ in the game with people, and those people have to be willing to make a significant effort to talk to voters.
