I created a class that stores an array of bits. At runtime, if I want to free the memory when the user quits the app, I do a loop through all objects of this class, resetting them to 0, then free the memory. My problem is that the leak management tool in VS doesn't show any problem. I tried to profile the leak with Windbg - no leak. There are no operations by the user on the object. Which field should I inspect in order to get the leak trace? A: The problem was a bug in the build of VC++. Thanks to Hamid and Volker Q: iOS App with extreme limited size I 3e33713323
