GRAIL co-founder and CTO Kai-Fu Lee made the announcement at the TechCrunch Disrupt NY Hackathon on Thursday, telling the audience: "We have to get back to reality. If we are to be credible, if we are to be trusted in this space, you guys are going to have to change." A clear message for the audience. As we move forward. You will have to change. #DisruptCToNY Lee also posted on Twitter, saying: "Over the last decade and a half, we have supported more than $1 billion in basic research in life sciences. We have worked with fantastic researchers at some of the world's best universities, including Stanford, MIT, CMU, UCLA,

---

Berkeley, SUNY Stony Brook, Princeton, Duke, NYU, and the KAUST, KNI, and JTST."

"Advancing medicine will require mass measurements, and not one-off experiments. We have invested in a few dozen open source 3D printing companies. We are currently 1/10 of the way to the finish line on that challenge. But we will need to build a new class of companies. Firms that have the mass production skills to embed instruments into tissues, to scale them, to engineer sterile and non-hazardous materials, to create disposable material, to package materials that can be used at low temperature, and to regulate, isolate, sterilize, validate and store products that we grow in a lab."

Here is the video of his announcement: Will this bring a change to GRAIL's business model? It will be interesting to see. In our own newsletter, we've just posted an exclusive interview with Kai-Fu Lee, co-founder and CTO of GRAIL, talking about where he sees 09e8f5149f
