As a result of UK Chancellor of the Exchequer George Osborne's announcement on Wednesday, he has refused to hand a £2.6 billion contribution towards the EU's 2014-2020 budget, which is £6.1 billion a year – or around £40 a person. Though Osborne is a Conservative, with a centrist track record in the past (British economies are conservative until the out years, and then they turn liberal). Whilst this explains why the Conservative Party is also actively trying to get as many Labour and Lib Dems as possible to vote Conservative in the 2017 general election, despite Labour and Lib Dems having agreed to 'green deal' measures, it doesn't really explain why the EU has spent such a large portion of its budget on anything (as evidenced by Brussels not spending any of the £12 billion in 2010),
