BSQL Hacker is an automated SQL Injection tool designed to detect, exploit and execute blind SQL injection attacks on web applications. I am writing a tool that will automatically check for code injection vulnerabilities on a website. Havij is an automated SQL injection tool that helps penetration. Q: jQuery - How can I get the index of the current row so I can set its background color? I have a simple table populated with two columns of items. One is a certain color and the other is marked with a "this one is blue" markup. I would like to use jQuery to check if the background color of the current row's th element is blue and then change the color of the th to red. This is the code that I came up with so far, but I'm not having any luck.

$('#table').bind('change', function() { $('#table tbody tr
        td:eq(0)').each(function(i){
            if(this.style.backgroundColor == 'blue'){ $(this).css('color','red'); } if(i == 0){ $('#table tbody tr').css('background', '#000'); } }); A: Don't use :eq(0) with jQuery Use :first-child, :last-child,
:has, :only-child, :empty, :even, :odd, :first, :last,
:nth-child $('#table').bind('change', function() { $('#td:first-child').each(function(i, v) { if (this.style.backgroundColor == 'blue') {
        this.style.color = 'red';
