Gameplay is usually rated as the most important thing of an RPG. Its as obvious as it can get that a game with fantastic gameplay is always a winner, right? I have played a lot of games over the years but I can not remember another game that has had such great gameplay and that was developed as an Indie Game. This game has a lot of potential! The combination of great gameplay, unique world, the full loot policy and the no zones and no instances are a few things that make this game stand out from any other game. Great job Aventurine! A little bugbear on the original announcement is the absence of tutorials, but since the game seems to be playable in some way from the moment it starts (no tutorial means playing in sandbox mode), and besides I doubt it would be one of the first things a new player would want to do, I have faith the game will be solid when released. ## What's new:

Technically, orbital injections are not rocket launches, despite the metaphorical usage. Orbits are already far beyond being inside Earth's gravity well, and so any upper stage burn is no longer pulling the vehicle away from Earth. Orbital Injections can take place in Space or Near Space, but they're always free-flying (or sub-orbital, depending on your definition) with respect to the Earth. An injector is a rocket just as a delivery vehicle is a rocket. Injector rockets launched in the early history of rocketry were specialized "pump" and "gun" rockets, not full-fledged solid-fueled rockets that exploded away into space. An injector launched spacecraft into orbit can be thought of as taking place in two steps. It slowly accelerates the spacecraft away from Earth in a tangential direction. The tangential velocity is called the course/velocity. makes a premature "bolting out" burn to impart a tangential velocity component to the spacecraft. When a one-stage rocket does this, it's called a Boost-Glide. Boost-Glides can only move the spacecraft, not the astronaut; this is why they are called "boost" burns. The entire mission profile (illustrated in this doc) is then referred to as a Low-Altitude Escape Orbit (LEO). This is what the astronauts mainly fly; the crew module needs to fly 200+ miles high so it can be captured and reach orbit with LEO. Both the course and (if needed) the timing for the premature burn are carefully planned for the vehicle to accurately enter and come out of orbit. So the complicated burn is technically just providing two velocity change vectors: A vector tangential to the Earth's surface, corresponding to the course of the spacecraft. This is the "course/velocity" of the injector. A vector perpendicular to the gravity of the Earth, corresponding to the burn's "time of injection" ...in order to flip the vehicle into an orbit or to escape Earth's gravity. The burn's duration or burn "time" is closely related to the velocity at which the spacecraft leaves the Earth, but also affects the vehicle's subsequent inclination (pointing of the vehicle relative to the Earth's equator) p See this file for details (look under "planetary injection burns", for example). This game is mostly all about BMichael (BikeMichael? Bike-Michael?) who is a bike from over 200 years ago that was made in the shape of a man. He has the head of a gorilla, a man's torso, the legs of a wild man, and hooves of a horse. For some reason his bike had trouble staying up, so he needed some help and his parents decided to put him on some more modern ones. Sadly he had no problem riding, but he was afraid of heights, so everyone put him on some normal bicycles. As you can see from the red stuff on the sides, none of his tires came off. For reasons that i will not get into, he is now in the modern day and has rebelled against his parents. He wants to see the world and take his best roller coaster stunts as far as he can go. About the Game: BMichael is a game where your goal is to reach the other side of each level without falling off the edge. You do that by performing the coolest parkour stuff you can, and finding your way through the levels in a way that you find fun. You do some cool stuff, like flips, rolls, jumps, and slides. There are also some boss levels and some very hard parkour challenges to complete. KEY FEATURES: - Arcade Style Level Design - Five enormous worlds, spanning a wide range of different terrains. - Hundreds of levels to play through. - Trainers, which you can unlock if you play long enough. - Multiple Characters - Secrets! :) - No Ads, No In-App purchases, all for the low price of a humble $0.99USD. - Finally, a good bike game for iOS is finally here!
