===== AndresNoMetaxas

You're doing it wrong if you apply the 'taser' style if you don't want to arrest people.

You're doing it wrong if you don't want to arrest people if your goal is to make Germany a vibrant democracy and a free society. ~~~ bdevine Well yes, but do you have a citation for that? I don't recall hearing any data on the number of 'tasing' incidents in the past year or two. I think it could very likely be more effective in the hands of a seasoned police officer, and to the degree that police force training is changing, the less structured scenarios we see in these incidents are playing out in a different way. ~~~

AndresNoMetaxas From a New York Police Department spokesperson, she called the tasing "harmless" compared to other uses of force. "She was lashing out, she'd pulled away from me. She was writhing around. The only solution I thought was to take her down and not let her hurt herself," the officer said. "But it was just a matter of time before he, the suspect, tried to take the officer down and so we were forced to use a Taser on him." ----- irks me because it shows that

.It's Not Hard to See What Democrats Wrote in the Iran Deal by Josh Kraushaar  Beneath the chant of "USA, USA" from Democrats who fought with President Obama to get the deal, and those who disagree with his signature policy achievement, there's another set of voices. They warned the White House that something's fishy with Iran and that the deal is radioactive. The New York Times editorial page has been carrying water for the administration for years, even going so far as to assert: "The point of the deal is to weaken Iran's nuclear program" (August 16, 2015). And they weren't the only ones. In July, the Wall Street Journal editorial page said the same thing, and also said: "Negotiations were likely doomed to failure in the first place." (The Journal is owned by Dow Jones, publisher of The Hill.) The left-leaning The Nation and the left-leaning The New Republic also said in July that the Iran deal will be a catastrophe. "The whole agreement is premised on a fiction," wrote The Nation (July 9). The head of the National Iranian American Council, Trita Parsi, even had this to say about the Iran deal: "It is ill-conceived, poorly thought-through and will not end the cycle of confrontation. It will strengthen Iran. It will undermine the international coalition against Iran. It will embolden [Iranian President Hassan] Rouhani and his allies and make it harder to change the regime.” Although the role of the pro-Israel lobby in the Democratic Party has been well documented, it has not received much press attention or analysis. This is partly because the pro-Israel camp has been so successful in translating its pro-Israel messaging into Democrat-endorsed policy, and partly because Democrats so rarely see the party’s pro-Israel messaging through the prism of national-security threats. But now, perhaps, with a $400 million initiative to oppose the Iran deal, Democrats are taking notice. It’s enough to make you wonder how much influence the pro-Israel lobby has when you see that most of the Democratic senators who signed onto the letter against the Iran deal have overwhelmingly endorsed pro-Israel positions. The list of senators signing onto a letter penned by Democratic Sen. Bob Menendez and Republican Sen
