What's new in Neoncube:

FX is a project aimed at creating an extremely realistic polygonal model of an Neoncube. Unlike a hand-drawn model, a polygonal model allows much greater detail, and many more animation cells. This means that it takes much longer to get a model built, but is also much more recognizable in-game once built. This is a project that I have been working on for over a year, and I now intend to finish it. The model will have various real-life versions as well as many computer generated ones. The computer-generated versions have a grey or black "skin" which are meant to be covered with a flexible rubber skin, and then painted.

History I first became interested in the Neoncube design after reading "The Mystic Meatball" (The "Meathook" is a unique design, and at the time the project was designed to be the standard design for all neogamefront's projects. Unfortunately, once the Neoncube came out, the project lost a bit of steam. This helped me because the project started taking way too much time, and I decided to restart the project after I learned some new techniques. I started this project years ago, but this past spring, I repainted and colored the project. Due to its nature, many of the textures I used for the project have served me well in other projects.

Description Due to the simplicity of the Neoncube design, which consists of only 12 polygons, I was able to model it in much less time than I would estimate. Unfortunately, due to its nature, the model consists of many polygons. I made use of both a blender set up in orthographic mode, and a vertex skinning program called Lo-Terrain to help me. The fact that the design consists of 12 polygons is a major strength of this model. It means that the model can be colored for any surface smoothly without having to worry about the shape being broken up. The Major Limitations Technically, I am not sure if this model is possible. One limitation of this model, as I only know of one software program in which it could be accomplished, is that if the two skins inside the cube overlap each other, the cube is no longer considered properly constructed. I have checked the model in the many important places. These parts consist of the front and back of the cube
