Mandy Hale, also known by her many blog readers and Twitter fans as The Single Woman™, . The Single Woman: Life, Love, and a Dash of Sass. I know that I cannot force much traffic to or from a particular site. I have been using hhttpf and some iptables rules to create a DoS condition on the gateway. This is not really useful, because the only way I can see to attack my system is to DDoS me. I am looking for a simple solution, so that I can see how many requests to a particular site are made per hour and (if possible) by which user. So far, I have only seen tools for web servers, which is not very useful. Any advice? Thanks!

Kryoto 09-21-2007, 07:41 PM To see how many requests to a particular site you can use webpager. It is simple and I can get it to show me a graph. I know that you can also add the --no-graph flag, but I was hoping to see a different graph. Mihai Rezet

If I want to see how many requests per hour, I can add --graph-temps. If I only want to see the IP addresses that are connecting to the server, I can add --no-ip. Then just open the graph from the command line and you will see the requests. Mihai Rezet 09-21-2007, 08:09 PM How to get the IP addresses? was very satisfactory. MedStar Georgetown University Hospital MedStar Georgetown University Hospital is a private, nonprofit academic medical center in the United States. It is located in the northwest quadrant of Washington, D.C., east of the Georgetown University Medical Center campus, west of VOA Federal News Radio Headquarters and south of the Georgetown campus. The hospital opened in February 1968, as Georgetown University Hospital (GUH), as a 24-bed acute care facility with a community hospital-like ethos, on a six-acre campus. It quickly became a teaching hospital. In 1987, it was re-branded as MedStar Georgetown University Hospital, taking its name from the hospital's previous incarnation as Georgetown University Hospital. The name MedStar was established two years earlier. Guarding the hospital's entrance is an octagonal white stone building with a steep pitched roof surmounted by an intricate gabled dormer. GUH, as it was initially called, was a teaching
