We formulate an empirical position operator to construct an effective Hamiltonian of an atom in the ground state of the fully quantized electromagnetic field in the continuum and its relativistic generalization. The system is noninertial and, due to the strong coupling to the quantized field, exhibits relativistic phenomena. This formalism is applied to analyze the properties of the emerging ground state in the presence of an external probe field and applied to conclude that the a and b atoms have to be described in a probabilistic formalism. We find that the probability distribution is discontinuous at each order of perturbation theory.
