solve this? A: Here are some tips that may or may not work, but what you should try:

Disable any anti-virus or other security software that is installed on your computer.

Open cmd (type cmd in the Search Bar) and type the following command: shutdown /r /t 0 And press Enter. Power off your computer, then power it on again.

This may actually help to fix your problem, but sometimes it doesn't. Sometimes, your ram is used up. The RAM is the "swap" or "cache" memory on your computer. If your computer is running slow, you might be getting rid of the swap memory space. You might try changing the content of your ram. Go to your BIOS and the change the value of the swap space to something more reasonable. When you turn on your computer, it will use this swap space. And don't forget about your virus protection, this might be the first thing that your computer uses up if your PC gets a virus. You really should get your virus protection up to date, so that your PC doesn't have to work so hard. If it doesn't work, then try shutting your computer down, then use these steps: Shut down your computer. Then wait 10-15 seconds, and power on your computer. Your computer should restart from Windows. And don't forget about your virus protection, this might be the first thing that your computer uses up if your PC gets a virus. You really should get your virus protection up to date, so that your PC doesn't have to work so hard. See, it works! EDIT #3 That's strange... I searched the forums and I only found one with the same problem. The most common solution was to try a power reset of the router. You should be able to access your router's admin panel from your router's web browser. Click the "Settings" or "Setup" link, and
