There's a button to view definitions of words, a button to search through a dictionary, a button to navigate to the website and an option to export everything as a PDF file. The usual things: case brief, flash cards, analyzing the cases and writing personal projects. Now, flash cards is the one I don't have good with, and I have learned how to solve them by myself, but case briefs are one of the things that I am really struggling with. Case briefs come from a system of cases that a student has to read and analyze, using the provided cases. For flash cards I have a report that I have to make with a strong argument to use, which has been divided into two sections; an introductory part and a conclusion; you get to choose which part you want to write the report for. For example if I wanted to write for the introductory part, I would be using the first case brief for the report. I will take all the details from the case brief and apply them to the introductory part of the report. You have control over the various elements and the font size for the text. It can come in handy if you are learning how to distinguish cases as you read them in class. There is an undo function if you change something and don't want to delete it. You also have the ability to bookmark the various sections of the case briefs so that you don't have to read through them. There are two modes to
