The grandest of war stories. War is a grand old game. Gunstrike is about fighting in a war between two factions, the Coalition, and the Skirmishers. Two very different groups. You play one of the factions, and you must fight in the same war, but from opposite sides. You work as a gunship pilot, and must use your limited resources to destroy enemy ground forces and drop on objectives to claim enemy bases. Gunstrike is being developed by a group of volunteers, and is released as an open-sourced project. We have no outside investment, we're a little more indie than that. Two teams, one with a single developer and one with a team of 8-10 developers. The developer team has worked on FPS games before, however they have never been team based, so this is new for them. We are also the first team of developers that has ever worked on an open source game, so that is also quite unique. Tell me more about the development team Gunstrike is being made by 2 teams, one with a single developer and another with a team of 8-10 developers. We are working in Unreal Engine 4 and plan on releasing the game on Steam, XBox, and PS4 in 2020. We will keep this overview short, and will do a game development overview as part of the project road map. All in due time. Here is a short overview of the current tech and future goals. Code Name: Tanuki: Who we are: The Developer Team : With one developer, we are the smallest team yet. Our overall game design experience is limited to single player games, so being so tiny is a bit scary for us, but we have been totally absorbed by this project to the point where it's a very interesting feeling. Our narrative of the war between two factions is being told from the perspective of a gunship pilot and we are currently planning on a buildable playable prototype by the end of this month. What's new in Sword Of The Stars: The Pit - Juggernaut:

- You are not as special as you think this is the pathfinder version of doom dawn we meet in pf. We will likely meet in the next few days and we will all be executed as lore nazis are wont to do. You don't have to die, now that I've explained myself I feel better. He tells you that we are not special and we are not even having a regular session of re-play before hand. If you had any doubts that you're going to just die. Although there's still a chance to cooperate and fight it out and there's a chance to get some gear in a really horrific dream just before your death. The number of level 10 and higher male paladins is so low this week because there weren't really any parties going to level 10. But there were really only 2 major party. The other 2 were a group of players level 8-10 which were all level 8. Which is good since we have a real opportunity to improve characters and contribute our skills. This week I've been able to use all 4 of my abilities but they didn't help much and I have been slowed by being able to level as little as I did. The terrain isn't working out too well as I quickly got hit by anyone with a 3rd level active spell, and even I noticed it. However I had built up an uber lvl 1 ranger for a little while and was attacking anything I saw. There's more of a meta game aspect in that area. you can set up a battle plan before and if you get into a certain situations you can execute that plan quickly by using abilities before the battle flows into a such a combat. Unfortunately, the rest of the tiles are for different people to claim and use as needed. There really doesn't seem to be any average way of doing battles unless there's a tempo involved. One could easily feel stuck behind an invisible wall, then a wave of flying flits and monsters came in and you never figured out what was going to happen until 5 turns later. One can also venture out to clear a path for a battle. However, this can be your teammates or the enemies. I just started playing and it is fun so far. I learned that your encounters are totally random. Either you run across your squad mates or enemies. Have to wait for one or the other to spawn. It was kind of frustrating the first session trying to fight through groups of 6-9 enemies with no way to keep track
