“We’ve been working on this for three years and the final result is an incredibly fun game that creates an authentic match experience,” said Producer Joaquim Abranches. “The result of our research into real-life football is fully integrated in FIFA 22, in a way that really captures what makes football the most exciting game on earth. We believe the next evolution of gameplay will come from within and we believe that the best way to understand the sport is through its players, not the balls, sticks or the stadiums.” “When you hit the first ball at kick off in FIFA 22, it’s going to feel like the coolest football game ever,” commented Domenico Scala, President of EA SPORTS. “We’re using the velocity of the player in real-time rather than using a server to pull data together like last year. It looks, feels, and sounds more like a match, providing a more realistic football experience.” “FIFA is the deepest football franchise in the world and we believe this latest iteration will be the biggest step forward in the franchise yet,” noted Steve Nash, executive vice president at EA SPORTS. “HyperMotion Technology is a game-changer and it’s ultimately making a game that fans will love, even more, and one that will last and be enjoyed for years to come.” The most obvious difference with the “HyperMotion Technology” is player models. Instead of always being extremely stiff and lacking in mobility, every player in FIFA 22 is equipped with an articulated body, where they all move realistically and feel like players you would play against in real life. Developed in conjunction with the successful 4Blades studio (Yasuhiro Wada, Sen-Ei Hirai, Hiroyuki Chiyoda, Tetsuya Kondo and Takuya Shindou), this new technology is used to animate the ball and bodies of all the players in FIFA 22. New details are added to the ball’s surface and the movement of any player on the pitch, while the ball’s behaviour and physics are also improved. An example of this is the new “Rolling” behaviour of the ball, which now allows players to do various tricks while standing or running, such as rolling and pirouetting through opponents’ defences. FIFA’s animation system was also improved thanks
