His family was of the Tuscany aristocracy but later moved to

Milan. He went to university and there met the future Gen.

Napoleon Bonaparte. Pellico, a dashing young soldier, was so smitten with Napoleon that he adopted him into his family. He followed his lover into French service and became a soldier in Napoleon's army. He was wounded and taken prisoner in Russia in 1812. He remained in prison for four years (1812-1816) without being charged with any crime. Napoleon, unaware of Pellico's affection, allowed him to come and go as he pleased. He also allowed Pellico to buy a fine watch and get certain books from the local library. Pellico was allowed to receive packages which he could then trade in for food. But Napoleon's Chief of Staff, Marshal Berthier, had his own plans. He was a villain who was appointed to his post to carry out Napoleon's purposes. Pellico wrote a book about his life in prison that was published in 1820. It sold very well. This book became a best seller and Pellico became a celebrity. Berthier determined to silence him. Pellico was actually turned over to General Savary, another member of Napoleon's army, who sentenced him to death. Pellico was then sent to the French island of 6d1f23a050
