A series of 108 cases of fractured zygomatic complex fractures is presented. The purpose of the study is to establish whether the most common fracture pattern, namely inferior rectus involvement, occurs because the orbitozygomatic suture is thinner (due to the bony cheek deformity) and weaker than is generally appreciated, and whether the fracture of the inferior rectus muscle (which is attached to the orbitozygomatic suture by a thin tendon) is due to weakness in the attachment to the orbitozygomatic suture. Seventy-eight of the fractures occurred in the inferior orbital compartment, while 30 fractures occurred in the middle orbital compartment. In all instances the inferior rectus muscle was intact, and the tendon was attached by a strong and regularly-spaced fibrous attachment to the diploic space for the orbitozygomatic suture. On postmortem dissection it was possible to show that the orbitozygomatic suture is almost completely enclosed in the rectus tendon and muscle, except for its dorsal two-thirds where it splits into the middle and inferior orbital compartments. The inferior rectus muscle is also attached to the diploic space for the orbitozygomatic suture. In all cases the distance between the site of the original fracture and the attachment to the orbitozygomatic suture was greater than 2 cm, and in most cases, 4 cm or more. There was no relationship between fracture pattern and distance. Our findings indicate that the orbitozygomatic suture is relatively thin and weak. The fracture of the muscle attachment of the inferior rectus to the orbitozygomatic suture is due to weakness in the tendon-orbitozygomatic suture attachment as well as weakness of the muscle itself.Yuko Kuroiwa is a Japanese voice actress. handshakes are captured by passively listening for devices connecting to the target network, or running a deauth attack and then listening for when devices reconnect. PMKIDs are captured from APs with the roaming feature enabled, by analyzing the first message of a WPA handshake.
ESP32 Wi-Fi Penetration Tool will also format the captured data into PCAP and HCCAPX files ready to be used with Wireshark and Hashcat.

To manage the tool, it creates a management access point where the target and attack type is selected, and the resulting data can be downloaded. Pair the ESP32 with a battery, and everything can be done on the go. The project is part of [risinek]'s masters thesis, and the full academic article is an educating read.
