im still trying to find an anti-virus that protects without false positives and that is lightweight; i am probably asking for too much. i also get it that the anti-virus companies also have a hard time figuring out what is a threat with numerous new threats appearing each day, but marking tools used by thousands of professionals regularly for years, as a virus is just plain wrong. ive been asked to provide the attached files in a p/w protected archive. password is: avg1 despite what your tech people have said, these files not contain a virus, they are legitimate password recovery tools. i understand that these could be used as a hacktool, but avg should only detect them as a potential threat, not a virus. also the user should be given the option to ignore without locking the file e.g. an i know the risks this program presents and would still like to use it button (like the confirm execution dialogue in windows vista). also, from a legal point of view, isnt it libelous against the company that provides these tools to claim that they contain malicious code, when in fact the code in the program does only what is stated by its creator to get rid of the warning, i uninstalled it and reinstalled it. now it is working perfectly, and the software is still labeled as a trojan. and the program is as well. so no matter how many times you reinstall the software, it is still labeled as a trojan. > still steds keygen for mac i have been using kaspersky for a while now and i have never seen any false positives. my home pc is infected with the kbflongpath virus. it is not a problem for me since i have the latest version of kaspersky.
