the album was recorded in a very short amount of time. and they were still kids. i remember being at their demo sessions. they were very shy and very quiet kids. i remember going back to their parents' house in london, and they didn't even know their names! that was where the name "tears for fears" came from, from the title of their demo. "everybody wants to rule the world" was a song we released as a single, and that was our first hit. the song was a very emotional song, and we thought it was very appropriate that it was our first hit single. and it was a very different song in the early days. it was a little bit faster, and it was still very new to us. i remember that we were having a lot of fun in the studio, and we were having a lot of fun recording it. we were having a good time. and then we went back to the states and were playing it on the radio for the first time, and it was a totally different reaction." - tears for fears. the first album, tears for fears, was the second record to reach the top 10 in the u.k. the next, songs from the big chair, was the first to reach no. 1, and it went on to sell over 6 million copies in the u. alone. (in the u.s., it sold over 3.5 million copies.) in 1983, roland and curt had just got their first taste of chart success. the album, while still a very personal and emotionally charged experience for the band, was released a year after the departure of their previous manager, jon soskin. it was a time of great uncertainty for the band as they had been together for a few years, but it was also a time of great new-found confidence. the album was a great commercial success, and the singles also became hits. tears for fears were now ready to take a new direction, one that would go on to become, arguably, one of the greatest albums of the 80s.
