Ladies and gentlemen, welcome to the mobile phone with a dual display - the Sony Xperia Z. This is not an ordinary dual screen smartphone, but it has something unique: 2 displays. And they're not just displays. This is the Xperia Z, also known as the PlayStation phone. It can play games in a virtual environment and it is pretty interesting to watch movies in a larger screen while playing music in another. Sony Xperia Z Although this phone was released to the public already in March, this review covers version 2.2.A.1.A.1 of the operating system, which is the newest version released for this phone. The newest version of the Android operating system is 4.2.2. This Android version is a little bit different from Android 4.2.2 in other phones. Apart from the dual displays, this phone has a few other features, such as a 5.0 inch (1280 x 720 pixel) IPS LCD display, a 5.0 MP camera with an autofocus mode, a 1.2 GHz processor, a 2.2 GHz dual core processor, 2 GB of RAM, 32 GB of internal memory, a microSD card slot with a theoretical maximum memory of 64 GB, a 3000 mAh battery, Wi-Fi connectivity, Bluetooth 4.0, GPS and NFC connectivity, a 3.5 mm earphone jack, the NFC SmartTags feature, and more. The display of this phone has a resolution of 1280 x 720 pixels, which is quite small. However, according to Sony, it is large enough to play a lot of games and watch movies on this phone. It is also worth mentioning that the screen of this phone is quite thick at 13.9 millimeters. This makes the phone feel very heavy, and its ergonomics are not particularly good. As for the display itself, its colors are quite bright,

Let us know what you think by leaving a comment.Q: Define an infinite sum of functions Is it possible to define an infinite sum of functions in which each function is multiplied by a positive value, and then summed over each of the infinite number of functions. To give a clearer explanation of what I'm looking for, I will give an example. If I have a sequence of functions, like,  $f_1(x)=1$   $f_2(x)=1/x$   $f_3(x)=1/x^2$   $f_4(x)=1/x^3$   $f_5(x)=1/x^4$  and I need to take the sum of these over the interval  $[0,10]$ , what I would want is this:  $s(0)=1$   $s(1)=2$   $s(2)=4$   $s(3)=9$  ... Does any one know if this is possible? A: The thing you are looking for is the Hadamard product. In your case:
$$\sigma_n(x) = \prod_{i=1}^n \frac{1}{1+x^i}$$
 You can of course extend this to an infinite sum. Ozone-assisted transition metal-catalyzed asymmetric addition of allyl and propargyl sulfoximines to aldehydes. [Structure: see text] The first examples of transition metal-catalyzed asymmetric reactions of sulfoximines with alkenes using a chiral bidentate ligand are reported. The first example of an ozone-assisted enantioselective reaction of sulfoximines with aldehydes is also described.Q: how to delete text from textbox after button press in android I want the user to be able to delete

What's New in the?

ScrollTrotter is a Chrome extension that calculates your distance travelled while browsing the web and displays it in your standard browser. It supports both meters and miles and can be used in any page loaded in your browser. You can also get an idea of how many times you scrolled down a page on the extension's stats. Usually, we at Softpedia pride ourselves with bringing you the latest, most useful and most interesting apps and tools out there. However, we also don't like to skip the occasion of bringing you something a bit fun. After all, what's life without a bit of laugh, right? Having said all that, here's a quirky question: how many times have you wondered how many meters, kilometers, miles, or feet have you scrolled today while browsing the Internet? Well, now it's possible to know exactly what distance you've travelled up and down any website with the help of a small Chrome extension called ScrollTrotter. No, it's not 100% accurate, but that's really missing the point First thing's first: please note that this extension is by no means a scientific tool. It counts the number of pixels you've scrolled down on a webpage and it converts them into real-life physical units of distance such as miles or kilometers. Because different websites have various implementations for scroll events and actions, it's pretty obvious that the calculated distance may vary a bit. Here's what's what. Since this is an extension that can be pretty much described by the word "silly," it should come as a surprise that it does not have a ton of features. However, we have to say that the extension does look rather nice with a stylish GUI that boasts 2 themes (Dark and Light). The extension allows you to switch between the metric and the imperial system, and displays the total distance scrolled today, the current month, and even the total distance scrolled since you've installed the extension. There's even a top trail section at the bottom that displays the websites you've scrolled the most on. Experience the scroller's high with the help of this funny extension. By now, it's quite clear that this extension will not help you in any meaningful way in regards to productivity. Some may call it useless altogether, but at the end of the day, if it manages to make even one user smile at the thought of installing such a tool, then it's
