Photoshop’s sharpening and noise reduction tools are all new in Lightroom 5. There are not a lot of settings available to adjust or fine tune these measurements. The auto-ISO adjustment is new, as is the setting for the snap-to-grid feature and the display of horizontal/vertical centers. The Smart Fix tool has been renamed to Upright as well as the Color Science tool. ... and that’s it. I really only like the new Live Adjust tool because it allows you to adjust your white, black and exposure contrast at the same time. The Hue/Saturation tool again allows you complete control over hue and saturation with a slider. The Split Toning tool lets you add a tonal value layer to different areas of your image by dragging that slider. That is, it’s like masking, but split and layered. Finally, the Content Aware tool is different from the Smart Fix tool, but that’s about it. I did not see anything new in the gradient tool, although I should add that this new tool is deceptively complex. I’ll let you be the judge.
