"Media, archiving, development, and the creation of compelling content is the team's focus: this is where we are moving Photoshop to," said Aaron Schowalter, senior manager of Creative Cloud platforms. "On the desktop we are focusing on usability and simplicity, and delivering a Photoshop that is more capable and capable on any device." We are also making the optimized export and viewing of multi-page documents available in the Tools & Options dialog box and in our Insights Library, a fast and easy way to spot value with the Star Ratings view in Photoshop CC. Having the fastest graphic engine and data abstraction libraries available is a must for a competitive image editing environment. With that in mind, our next milestone is to bring the speed and efficiency of our GPU-powered rendering pipeline to all areas where content is being displayed. Starting with PS CC 2020, we are enabling GPU rendering of photo composites and filling layers. You'll also notice GPU rendering of the content in the background of the main screen (and in all other displays) so you can instantly see the changes in real time. In addition to these enhancements for users, we are also delivering more powerful ways to connect and collaborate with others to create better products and experiences. Drawing on the incredible momentum that Adobe Sensei has built in the Market (over 2.5 billion downloads and counting), we're launching the Adobe Sensei APIs in Photoshop CC 2020, which will give developers access to billions of new datasets for a wide range of project needs.
