The update bumps the Surface Go's CPU from a 1.6GHz quad-core MediaTek to a 3.9GHz MediaTek M3 CPU with 4GB of RAM, as well as bumps the battery capacity. Surface Go is Microsoft's entry-level tablet. The Surface Go is made out of metal, weighs in at less than a pound, and features a 10.8-inch screen. The $399 tablet is nearly bezel-less, but Microsoft somehow manages to cram in a front-facing and back-facing stereo speakers, Microsoft Pen, along with USB-C and USB-A ports. Microsoft's Windows 10 operating system runs on the tablet. Update: We've updated this story to show the Surface Go's price at $399, rather than $349. One big change in the Surface Go update is that Microsoft is now selling the tablet with a $99 Type Cover, a detachable keyboard that doubles as a stylus. With the Type Cover, you can use the tablet with or without the keyboard attached. But only one of the two keyboards will work at a time. Other changes include the addition of iOS and Android app support, as well as a handful of new apps. Microsoft added the popular Quixote Paint app to the Surface Go, along with a new messaging app called Beam that essentially works like a Slack for business. An improved Reddit app and an improved version of CitiBike are two other new additions. The full Surface Go update comes as Microsoft is still trying to stake its claim in the personal computing industry. Just a few years ago, Microsoft was near the top of the pile, but now it's a distant third. Last year's launch of Windows 10 S, a stripped-down version of the Windows operating system, fell flat. After a rocky launch, Microsoft is now moving away from Windows 10 S. Most PC makers are going with
