The performance in Lightroom 5.3 and 5.4 may not be as good as other software that can use emulated DNG. But since I started doing photography with Lightroom I feel it is faster than using other photo software used to be. I think it is the combination of making catalogs automatically and then importing those catalogs into all other programs which makes Lightroom work well. Thanks to the smart previews it imports the previews thumbnails and after importing the actual images you can access them through the normal Digital 24-bit workflow. Usually, always serial number and type match. But during a recent update of only one Adobe program (the other is from Windows), my system crashed when opening Lightroom. I was afraid to lose all my work, so I re-installed it. In the course of the re-installation I also got the new serial number for Lightroom and noticed that the type (document type) had changed. I had some trouble with the radial filters course work that is the last part of the 3 set videos that in the last year Adobe released. While the video was very well done I kept crashing Lightroom while watching the presentation. After some googling I found that this is a known problem. I changed some things within my Adobe setup to get rid of the error but it still crashes. I have now reached out to make contact with Adobe. I think this is a problem in libre office presentation slides and will report back once it is fixed or at least mitigated. Thanks to Mircamen dos Santos of the Lightroom forums for the tip on the final solution.
